

O good people of the future, here do I now declare to you what I believe are the principles by which you may prosper and accumulate wealth.

Here do I pass on to you ancient but lasting principles by which you may acquire riches.

Read them carefully, O wise sons and daughters of the future.

Read, think, discuss and confer with the wise and those skilled in matters of finance and building wealth and, if you should find these principles true and valid, use them diligently.

Use them and practise so that you may be skilled in their use, and build your wealth.

May that wealth you build help you in your pursuit of your happiness, and may you use some portion of your wealth to help the needy and the deserving in their pursuit of their happiness.